Houthi Missiles Strike Two Saudi Airports

- Abha International Airport came under attack Tuesday: Saudi Arabia's General Authority of Civil Aviation said two residents, one Moroccan and one Algerian, were killed and 28 wounded. — CNN
- Riyadh's King Khalid International Airport was hit Wednesday: a Sudanese resident was killed and eight wounded. The Houthis claimed a ballistic-missile strike on King Khalid and said they disrupted air traffic, which Saudi officials have not confirmed. — CNN
- Saudi spokesman Maj. Gen. Turki al-Maliki said Saudi forces destroyed the ballistic-missile launcher in Sanaa while it was preparing another imminent attack; the U.S. Mission in Saudi Arabia issued a security alert warning Americans of potential drone and missile attacks and possible flight cancellations, and the Houthis warned international airlines to avoid Saudi airspace except around Mecca and Medina. — CNN

Mecca Alliance Activates: Pakistani Troops Confirmed in Saudi Arabia

- Following an emergency meeting in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, Turkey and Pakistan agreed to move immediately to implement collective defense commitments under the Mecca Joint Defense Agreement, including the rapid deployment of forces into Saudi Arabia. — CNN
- Pakistan's Lt. Gen. Ahmed Sharif Chaudhry confirmed to CNN on Wednesday that Pakistani forces are already stationed in Saudi Arabia, called the commitment absolute, and described a NATO-style provision treating an attack on one member as an attack on all. — CNN
- CNN also reported that more than one hundred U.S. military advisers are in Saudi Arabia providing intelligence and targeting support to the kingdom's operations against the Houthis. — CNN

IRGC Moves to Close Southern Hormuz Route

- IRGC commander adviser Mohammadreza Naqdi told Iran's Fars news agency that transit routes in the Strait of Hormuz deemed illegal by Iran, the southern pathway near Oman's coast, will soon be blocked, claiming the strait is closed until Iran's legitimate demands are met. — Reuters
- An IRGC Navy statement warned that no vessel should move from its anchorage in the Persian Gulf or the Sea of Oman, and that approaching the strait will be considered cooperation with the enemy and the offending vessel will be targeted. — Reuters
- The same Reuters wire reports IRGC-linked advisers disputing the rebound in flows, claiming only about ten ships a day transit the strait versus roughly one hundred twenty-five before the war, contradicting shipping data showing a strong late-September recovery. — Reuters

Iran Pushes Back on Vance's Enrichment Demand

- In an exclusive Reuters interview Monday, Vice President J.D. Vance said Iran must make a meaningful reduction in its nuclear enrichment capacity, not verbal assurances, to end the seven-month war: if you don't want a nuclear weapon, then why do you need sixty percent enriched fuel. — Reuters

- A senior Iranian official told Reuters on Wednesday that Washington's requests and ideas about the nuclear program are at odds with Tehran's demands. — Reuters
- Vance said Washington remains unsure who makes decisions in Tehran; President Trump rejected Iran's latest offer and has warned military operations could intensify after the midterms. — Reuters

Oil Back Above $100 on Houthi Strikes and Gulf Storm

- Brent crude rose ninety-three cents to one hundred one dollars and fifty-one cents a barrel and WTI rose eighty-two cents to ninety dollars and twenty-five cents on Wednesday, per Reuters' same-day energy wire. — Reuters
- Markets weighed a storm forming in the Gulf of Mexico, expected to become the season's first hurricane and threaten U.S. oil and gas facilities, against supply constraints from the Houthi attacks on Saudi airports. — Reuters
- Offsetting pressure came from Saudi Arabia's East-West pipeline flowing five point eight million barrels a day, roughly twelve million barrels a day of crude and two million of refined products leaving the Middle East by tanker over the last seven to ten days, and U.S. crude inventories falling by two point zero nine million barrels per American Petroleum Institute data. — Reuters

Markets

- Brent crude futures quoted at one hundred dollars and ninety-eight cents a barrel on October 7, per Reuters' same-day energy wire. — Reuters
- West Texas Intermediate futures quoted at eighty-eight dollars and ninety-two cents a barrel on October 7, per Reuters' same-day energy wire. — Reuters
- UK NBP day-ahead natural gas settled at one hundred eighty point two pence per therm on October 6, amid rising European gas prices on low storage, per the Wall Street Journal. — Wall Street Journal
- The U.S. ten-year Treasury yield stood at five point two eight percent on October 7, touching fresh twenty-four-year highs, per Reuters. — Reuters

Shipping

- Crude exports from the region averaged eighteen point three million barrels a day over the seven days ending September 30, provisional Kpler data, topping pre-war levels on fourteen days in September, per Reuters. — Reuters
- LNG shipments through the strait hit their highest monthly total since the war began in February: nineteen to twenty-one cargoes in September, thirteen Qatari and six Emirati per S&P Global, twenty-one per Kpler, but still roughly twenty to twenty-five percent of the pre-war eighty-six a month, per Reuters. — Reuters
